PROACTIVE PATIENT CARE TO REDUCE FALL RISKS

Falls are a leading cause of injury among seniors. Preventing them is crucial for maintaining the health and independence of older adults. One in four seniors over 65 report falling each year, and one in 10 falls result in an injury that requires restricted activity for at least a day or requires help from a healthcare provider. While not all accidents lead to an injury, it's important to encourage patients to be proactive about home safety and their physical health to reduce fall risk and serious injury.

There are many risk factors that you can evaluate with your patients to help mitigate the potential for an accident. According to the CDC, these factors include:

- Vitamin D deficiency
- Lower body weakness
- Difficulties with walking and balance
- Use of certain prescription and over-the-counter medications
- Hazards in the home such as clutter or furniture and décor that isn't secure
